I wish that I had read the reviews before ordering, because the print on these cards is so tiny that I am reluctant to use them in my ESL class as I had originally planned. Why not use a larger, more legible font when printing these out?

A bit disappointing. I'd wanted this to be used at the dinner table by my son's family (children ages 4, 6, and 10). The card size is very small, as well as the print. The topics/questions aren't developmentally appropriate for all ages, or at least adaptable as I'd expected. For example, I'd hoped there would be discussion topics like "What would you do if you found a ten dollar bill on the sidewalk?" or "What sports figure do you most admire and why?" Adults and teens might be able to get a conversation started, but some of the cards would require effort on the part of the listeners to make the conversation flow.

Good questions which start fun conversations. I have to agree that the print could be larger. Seems like an easy thing to fix. I'd recommend it for parties, ice breakers and road trips.

My husband and I went on a long road trip last summer, so I bought this to help fill in the time between stops. We had a lot of fun answering the questions. We didn't make it though the whole pack, so now we pull one out every night just for fun! Definitely recommend it.

I am a speech pathologist in a high school and often need the students to just talk to me so I can hear their speech production, etc. Sometimes they don't have much to say, so I bought this little chat pack. It has worked great and the students have responded really well to the questions. The topics are non-threatening and appropriate for school. The students and I are enjoying the conversations these cards spark. I highly recommend it for the school setting if you are just trying to get kids to open up a little and TALK!

These questions indeed generate thought-provoking questions. We recently used them at a dinner party and they worked great. We also use them as a couple for dinner most nights and they generate good discussions. They were recommended to us as a way to liven our dinner conversation and I would agree that they do!

As a technical trainer, I am always looking for ice-breakers to get my classes started. These conversation starters have been a life saver for me and our trainers. I leave the pack at the trainer's station and whenever a conversation started is needed, the box is right there. Great tool...thanks!

I gave these as a gift. My friend who works in clinic found them to be really great. While she is drawing labs she uses these to make small talk, instead of talking about the weather. They have also been good at passing the miles on road trips. They often jump start a conversation, so you might only need a couple cards to last a while.
