Customer Reviews

"Passionate Readers is the perfect title for this helpful book. Pernille manages to teach us how to harness true passion in ways that will transform the readers in our classrooms. It is no small feat to take such large and lofty goals and make them tangible and real for all educators and students, and yet that is what this books offers, with heart and style to boot." --Kate Roberts, National Literacy Consultant, Author, and Speaker

“A good professional text is a forever resource. We go back to it time and time again for that just-right lesson or chapter we need to fuel our craft. Passionate Readers moves like that novel you can't put down. Tucked in between the narrative of Pernille's five keys and tireless risk-taking in her passionate reading environment are the candid voices of the kids speaking their truths, shining a light on reading identity. Make room for a new forever resource." --Sara K. Ahmed, Literacy Coach & Consultant-in-Residence, NIST International School, Thailand

Pernille Ripp is a seventh grade teacher in Oregon, Wisconsin and the creator of the Global Read Aloud (www.theglobalreadaloud.com), a literacy initiative that has connected more than 2,000,000 students since 2010 through the use of technology. She speaks internationally and writes regularly on her blog (www.pernillesripp.com). She is also author of Passionate Learners: Giving Our Classrooms Back to Our Students

Pernille Ripp knows students because she asks for feedback and then listens to it. Her students help her create the best authentic classroom for them to learn in. Passionate Readers lets us all benefit from her questions. We clearly hear what works for students and how to create classes where students are engaged readers. The book is broken into very manageable pieces, which will let me come back as I need to throughout the year. As I set up my library this summer, I thought about Mrs. Ripp's suggestions. I want my students to be invested in their library, I want them to be excited about the books that we have and to help me find the next great book. I want my students to know that they can be readers, even if they aren't right now, and this book will help me with that message. Passionate Readers will be THE book for educators around the country to have great conversations about. I want my colleagues to read this and for us to all work toward making this the best year for the students who are in our classrooms. They get this year and we get the opportunity to make it a great one. Passionate Readers will help us do just that.

I love this book. To be fair, I was pretty certain I was going to love it since I pre-ordered it after nErDCampMI where I was again inspired by the author. It did not disappoint. If you loved The Book Whisperer, this book is totally for you. Really connected with Disrupting Thinking? You'll love this book. I like that Pernille tells about the good and bad parts of getting to where she is now. That great teaching is a thing we can all achieve if we can keep the big picture in mind. I've definitely got my 5% improvement ready to go. Teaching book shopping, owning the practice of book abandonment, and choice - but intentional choice. "We are helping children become adults who will read". All the ideas in the book are teacher friendly, but it belongs in an admin book group as well. I think the lessons about growing passionate readers can be applied to any grade where kids read - though I wish all middle schools would take this book on. Just to start some conversations, change some trajectories. So, yes, I really think its worth your time.

I love everything about Pernille Ripp and the amazing work she does. She manages to make me question everything I do to become the best teacher possible all while offering ideas and inspiration. I'd love to be a student in her classroom, but I'll content myself with stalking her online. She is one of those people you want to surround yourself with in hopes you catch some of the light she emits. I adored her previous book, Passionate Learners, and this next installment did not disappoint. Even avid followers of reading workshop, student choice, and student centered classrooms will find ah-ha moment galore in this book. I often caught myself staring off into space after a few pages contemplating how I might change my current practice. Thank you Pernille for taking the time to share yourself with the rest of us.

Important book that reminds us as educators that it is up to us to create the learning experience that will transform students' reading identities. Pernille shares her own experiences as both a learner and a teacher. She includes student quotes throughout the book which offer honest perspectives from the voices of her students. She outlines keys to creating a passionate reading environment, and offer tools that teachers can use with their own students.

I am speechless. This new book by Pernille Ripp gets to the heart of what is important in reading. After just one chapter I was already excited about the changes I would make this school year! A vital read in these educational times! Bravo !

Lots of practical ideas from the author's experiences as a teacher.
