Justin Ross Muchnick attends Phillips Academy Andover in Massachusetts and is the author of The Boarding School Survival Guide (Peterson's, June 2014) and co-author of Straight-A Study Skills (Adams Media, January 2013). He is the youngest journalist for The Bootleg®

(<http://stanford.scout.com>), Stanford University's sports news website, where he writes articles about college football. A passionate learner, Justin enjoys reading, writing, Latin, and modern American history. He is a varsity wrestler, plays soccer, participates on the Mock Trial team, and works as a campus tour guide. When Justin is not at boarding school, he resides in Newport Beach, California, with his parents and three younger siblings.

Didn't keep my teens attention

Our grandson, who is turning 16 on Easter Sunday, is already looking ahead to college. Hopefully, this will be a great tool for his planning.

exactly as advertised, thank you!

it has great explanations for high schoolers, wish i had this book when i was in high school but gave it as a gift to my neighbors daughters

Hoping this helps my college bound son figure out how to plan for his future

I thought based on other people's review that this book was good but it's just okay. There are better ones out there and even though it's written by a teenager, I can't say I can get my teenager son to even try reading it. I preferred the adMission Possible as well as the Secrets of Picking a College as a parent of high schooler

It's a good book, but I expected something more attractive to a teenager that would grab her attention. Instead, it's black & white & looks like another school workbook. I would've given it 5 stars had it been more eye catching or enticing to a teenager who'd rather be hanging out with friends.

Son is reading it now as part of his summer chores.
