Who Was Clara Barton?

Synopsis

Clarissa “Clara” Barton was a shy girl who grew up to become a teacher, nurse, and humanitarian. At a time when few women worked outside the home, she became the first woman to hold a government job, as a patent clerk in Washington, DC. In 1864, she was appointed “lady in charge” of the hospitals at the front lines of the Union Army, where she became known as the “Angel of the Battlefield.” Clara Barton built a career helping others. She went on to found the American Red Cross, one of her greatest accomplishments, and one of the most recognized organizations in the world.

Who Was Clara Barton? Who Was Clara Barton? Who Was Clara Barton? In 1833, when Clara Barton was eleven, her brother David fell off the roof of the barn on her family’s farm. He didn’t break any bones, but he did get very sick. Clara decided to take care of him. She cleaned his wounds, changed his bandages, and brought him his meals. For two years she almost never left his side. By the time David recovered, Clara was very good at nursing. Everything she'd done to help her brother seemed to come naturally to her. So when dozens of children in her Massachusetts town came down with smallpox, Clara nursed them, too. She knew that she might get smallpox, but that didn't stop her. The children needed her help. Over the course of her long, busy life, Clara Barton never stopped helping and healing people. She started schools for poor children, nursed wounded soldiers during the Civil War, and fought long and hard to bring the Red Cross to the United States. Under her leadership, the Red Cross won fame for its treatment of disaster victims and set new standards for public service. Barton also transformed the nursing profession, strengthened the women's movement, and inspired volunteer organizations all over the world. Once a shy small-town girl, Clara Barton became a true force for change. She was a woman to be reckoned with.

Chapter 1 Six Mothers and Fathers

Clarissa Harlow Barton, born in North Oxford, Massachusetts, on Christmas Day of 1821, was her parents' fifth child. She was the baby of the family, and her two sisters and two brothers were much older than she was. In Clara's household, everybody, not just her parents, told her what to do. It was almost like having six parents instead of two. But Clara was lucky—five of the six were interested in taking good care of her and making sure she learned the important things in life. Her father, Captain Stephen Barton, taught her about military history. Once an army officer in the Northwest Indian War of 1785–1795, he liked to sit by the fire and talk about his adventures. Clara would spend hours acting out different battles with him, which they both enjoyed very much.

I absolutely love this series of books. A must have for any homeschool library.

We use these books along with our history lessons!!!! Wonderful extra information!! Love the book collection who was and who is...

Daughter loves the book, nice addition to the "Who Was" series

Perfect for reading age children who want to learn more about history-or even those who love to read won't even realize they are learning facts and history the entire time!

Bought for the grandkiddos, they love them, thanks!!!!

Cleared up a little of the finer points of her life.

good book! Would recommend! LOVE this whole series, for kids of all ages! So much can be learned!

Arrived in time and it's excellent for a 5th grade reader! Not too much, too too little. Perfect!
