Customer Reviews

"Sure to appeal to anyone with an interest in south-east Asian food. . . . The photography is evocative enough to make you want to jump in and pull up one of the plastic stools with a cold beer. One of everything, please." Age --This text refers to an out of print or unavailable edition of this title.

Tracey Lister knows how to shop, cook, and eat in Vietnam. After fifteen years in the Melbourne restaurant scene, Lister took a sabbatical in Hanoi, where she met Jimmy Pham, founder of KOTO, a grassroots charity that helps street kids through vocational training in cooking and serving. Lister stayed on for a few years, setting up accredited training programs for the students. Her time at the charity, along with husband Andreas Pohl, resulted in their first book, KOTO. Lister currently runs a successful cooking school out of Hanoi.

I just got this book, and the recipes looks delicious. However, the writers must have to pay the ink bill for the books as the text is printed on a very thin light gray ink. You know how when your printer toner is almost gone and you're trying to eke out a just a few more pages? that's this book's standard text. It's a real hard read for my aging eyes even in bright light, let alone the kitchen. The pictures are fine and so are the indexes and table of contents. Why they picked this font and color for their main text is a mystery. I may have to go find a 20 year old to read it to me :)
